

2007-08 NCAA Instructions to Referees and Points of Emphasis

7-1-07

These points of emphasis for referees are guidelines in order to bring about consistency in the interpretation and application of the rules of the game. It is important that referees call the NCAA Water Polo Rules as written and as interpreted in the rule book or as distributed as interpretations during the year.

1. Promoting Offensive Action. Referees should promote offensive action. The referees shall refrain from declaring a foul if, in their opinion, such declaration would be an advantage to the offending player's team. It is always permissible for the referees to delay their whistle briefly to make sure that any offensive advantage is not taken away. When in doubt, the referees should make their call in favor of the offensive team. The referees should avoid calling ordinary defensive fouls (notably at set) away from the ball as this takes away the advantage and flow from the team on offense. If the referees have decided not to call a series of minor fouls committed by the defense, then they should not call an equally minor offensive foul a moment later at that same spot. Likewise, referees should call ball under only when the ball is clearly under water for more than a fraction of a second.

2. Calling Offensive Fouls. Referees should avoid calling minor offensive fouls away from the ball if they do not affect the game. Sometimes it is correct to delay making a call for a split-second to see if the offensive foul will affect the game. In most cases referees should call fouls on the offensive team as ordinary offensive fouls (ball turnover, with no exclusion). At the center forward position, the referee should call an offensive exclusion foul only in the most severe cases (an offensive turnover usually being the more appropriate call). However, if the offense commits a gross or overly physical foul, such as kicking or elbowing, it should be called immediately as an offensive exclusion foul or even an offensive misconduct foul.

3. Competing for Position at Set. When the ball is not at set, referees should allow competing for position between the center forward and the set defender. However, neither player can commit an exclusion foul to gain a better position or to keep an existing position. Excessive force, overly physical play, arms out of the water and around an opponent, and suit grabbing to change or hold position should be called as an offensive turnover or a defensive exclusion foul or even as misconduct, depending upon the nature of the foul. If both the center forward and the set defender are facing each other and holding, the offensive player must let go and face the ball before the pass is thrown to set, or an offensive foul should be called.

4. Calling the Set Position. Among the most important aspects of the game for referees to call consistently is the play at set. Referees should consider the negative consequences of blowing a quick whistle. When the ball comes into set, the referees need to be patient in allowing the center forward the opportunity to play the ball. A quick whistle at set may take away an offensive advantage and eliminate, however unintentionally, the scoring threat of the center forward. If the set defender has established an appropriate defensive position and the foul is not overly aggressive and doesn't take away a scoring advantage, then an ordinary foul should be called.

5. Calling Set When a Slough is Coming. When the ball is at set and a slough is coming, referees may call either an ordinary foul or an exclusion foul against the set defender. If the center forward has an advantage and wants to try to shoot, the referees should wait momentarily and then call an exclusion foul if the defender commits a foul to prevent a shot attempt. If the center forward has no advantage and is just trying to pass to an open teammate, it is correct for the referees to call a quick ordinary foul so that the offensive team maintains possession. However, if a bad pass is made that is closer to the defense, then the referee may refrain from calling a foul. If there is no slough coming, the referees should let the center forward work with the ball to try to create an advantage. The referee should call a foul if the advantage is taken away (usually an exclusion foul in this case).

6. Calling Inside the 5-Meter Area. To determine whether there should be an exclusion foul or a 5-meter penalty called, the referees must concentrate on determining the defender's position in relation to the center forward. The offensive player having an advantageous position and a probable goal are the crucial factors in determining whether a 5-meter penalty is the appropriate call.

7. Calling the Transition Out of the 2-Meter Area. Referees should allow the former center forward and set defender to untangle after a possession change. Do not call a foul too quickly. However, once these players have untangled, a foul can be called on either or both of these players for a kick off or for a hold, sink or pull back. This concept refers to the former center forward and set defender and not to other players in the water.

8. Control of the Game. It is important for the referees to keep control of the game. A player who commits an overaggressive, dangerous or violent foul should be called for either misconduct or brutality and removed for the remainder of the game, rather than just excluded for 20 seconds. Players in the water who show disrespect toward the referees should be removed promptly for the remainder of the game for misconduct or for 20 seconds for a minor act of disrespect.

9. Control of the Benches. Referees should be certain to keep control of the benches. However, they should not listen for and be overly sensitive to comments by coaches and players on the bench, and they should not try to "catch" a coach saying something. If the coaches or players on the bench start questioning calls, the referees should issue a stern warning. If the head coach, assistant coach or players continue to question the referees' calls, a yellow card shall be issued to the head coach, assistant coach or bench as appropriate, to be followed by a red card to the head coach, assistant coach or to an individual player on the bench, if necessary. (The assistant coach assumes the rights and privileges of the head coach when the head coach receives a red card during a game.) The head coach and captain may address the referee at the intervals between periods, during timeouts or with permission of the referee. In addition, the head coach may speak to the referee when filing a protest. The rule relating to who may address the referee (Rule 7-4) and at what times shall be enforced consistently and according to the rules. The referees must apply the rules equally and fairly, regardless of gender, experience, responsibilities or intonation of voice of the coach.

10. Consistency of Calls. Referees should call fouls consistently throughout each possession, period and game. Referees should call an exclusion or ordinary foul even if only a few seconds remain in that possession, in the period or in the game. Perimeter fouls (ordinary and exclusion) must be called consistently throughout the game, including the last minute when the team with the lead has the ball.

11. Putting the Ball into Play. Referees should ensure that players who are awarded a free throw put the ball into play properly and within a reasonable length of time. Referees should also make sure that defensive players do not interfere with the free throw by waving an arm or moving an arm toward the player with the free throw.

12. Direct Shots on Goal. The referees shall not use any signal, such as raising an arm or showing five fingers, to indicate that a player is eligible to shoot a direct shot on goal after that player's team has been awarded a free throw for a foul committed outside 5 meters. The shot must be taken without delay, but referees should allow a player who is fouled at or outside 5 meters the opportunity to retrieve the ball, to get in a normal shooting position and to look at the goal before taking a direct shot. The player taking the direct shot on goal may take a lob shot as long as it is without delay and without faking. There is no set distance a defensive player with the hand up behind the head has to be away from the offensive player, but if that defensive player is so close that the offensive player cannot make a throwing motion without hitting the defensive player, the defensive player has to back away or be called for interfering with the free throw. However, the offensive player may not unnecessarily lean or make some extraordinary arm motion into the defender to create this contact; that is, the free throw should be in a normal throwing motion.

13. Two-Hands Rule. Referees must be certain to immediately call an exclusion foul if a defender puts two hands up in an attempt to block a shot while outside the 5-meter line and as a penalty foul if the defender puts two hands up to block a shot while inside the 5-meter line. The defensive player does not have to touch the ball nor does a shot need to be taken, because the defensive player is being punished for intent. It is also a penalty foul if the defensive player inside the 5-meter line puts two hands up in an attempt to block a pass that would have resulted in a probable goal.

14. Fouling During a 6 on 5. Referees must carefully watch defenders during a 6 on 5 to be sure they are not sinking offensive players or grabbing their arms, especially on the posts. If they do, an exclusion foul (or a penalty foul if a goal was likely to occur) should be called.

15. Drive/Perimeter Defense. A defender cannot hand-check, impede, hold or grab the suit of an attacker who is trying to gain an offensive advantage. Referees should exclude a defender who moves laterally to prevent an attacker from driving. However, if the offensive player swims over a defensive player who has established a positional advantage, an offensive foul should be called and the ball turned over. In addition, if a defender grabs the arm or hand or sinks a perimeter player before a pass has arrived, the defender should be excluded.

16. Ducking Under. The referees should not call an exclusion foul on the defense if the offensive player ducks under the defender and then the defender puts both arms in the air to show there is no foul. The defender does not need to get off the offensive player, as it was the offensive player who went under water to put the players into that position. However, the defender may not use one or both hands to hold down the offensive player.

17. Double Exclusions. Calling double exclusions will eliminate much of the wrestling that occurs, but the referees must be certain that both players have fouled each other before calling a double exclusion. If the center forward and the set defender are both being overly physical, it is correct for the referees to exclude both players and award the ball back to the offense with a new 35-second shot clock. However, it is preferable if the referee can determine which player fouled first, as it is better to call either a defensive exclusion if it was the defense or (usually) an offensive turnover if it was the offense.

18. Referee Instructions for Penalty Shot. All players must leave the 5-meter area and be at least 2 meters from the shooter. A player of the defensive team shall have the first right to take the position on each side of the shooter. The referee controlling the penalty throw shall signal for the throw to be taken by whistle and by simultaneously lowering the arm. The lack of specificity in designating the position of the referee when the whistle is blown allows the referee controlling the taking of the shot to determine the most advantageous position for that referee to watch the shooter, the defensive players and the goalkeeper. The other referee shall watch the back court for interference. The shooter may not move forward until the ball leaves his/her hand. The defensive players may not interfere with the taking of the penalty throw (shout, whistle, splash, hit the shooter's arm, etc.) up to the time the ball leaves the hand of the shooter. When the whistle is blown, the defensive players on each side of the shooter may only move forward towards the goal, not towards the shooter. After the ball is released, the defensive players may move towards the shooter.

19. Recognition of and Correction of Errors. The referees must be aware of and, if possible, correct certain errors as described in Rule 7-9 in the interest of fairness. No team shall gain an advantage over an opponent because of this type of error.

20. Exposure. In women's competition, a defender shall be excluded for 20 seconds after grabbing an offensive player's suit and causing breast exposure. Likewise, when an offensive player grabs the defender and causes exposure, the player shall be excluded for 20 seconds. Finally, if a player grabs her own suit and exposes a breast, a minor act of disrespect with a 20-second exclusion shall be called.

21. Zippers. To decrease the incidence of exposure, it is recommended that the swim suits be full-back and that the zipper is fully zipped. If the zipper becomes unzipped, the player should zip up the suit at the next appropriate stoppage of the game when the player's team is in possession of the ball, without taking away the advantage, just as in the cap replacement rule (Rule 4-1). If the zipper can not be fixed at that time or if a suit is torn, the referees should remove the player, allow the immediate entrance of a substitute, and the original player may be substituted in after the problem is corrected.

22. Shortening a Timeout. The team that called a timeout may shorten the timeout by informing the referee at any time before 1:45 minutes have elapsed that the team is ready to resume play. The referee shall blow a whistle when so informed as a signal to both teams that play will start in 15 seconds. The referee may not decide to end the timeout when the referee sees the team that called the timeout swimming out into the field of play.

23. Nonconforming Pool Markings. In order to assist institutions to conform with the rules on pool markings, the referee should inform the coach before a game of any issues with the field of play and caps that need to be corrected in the future. Since the width of many pools is greater than 20 meters, side lines must be used in such cases and they must be marked as described in the rules. If cones are used, they must be of adequate size and weight. After the game, the referee must report to the conference and assigning authority any conduct that requires a game suspension, and any issues with non-conforming caps, equipment deficiencies or recurring desk problems. This discussion with the coach and the conference reporting responsibility with regard to facilities are required in order to attempt to alleviate these problems.
